Hi, my name is Maggie. I have been teaching in Kindergarten for a number of years, I like watching drama and I like to teach students drama because it is valuable for them. ‘The first six years of a child’s life, is the prime period for language development. Exposing children to the wide variety of sounds from different languages early on can help them build a strong foundation for learning the language in the future.’ With the experience gained from drama, we can help children develop creativity, improve language and communication skills, enhance problem solving techniques and build self confidence. Create an environment where children can pick up the target language effortlessly in a joyful and fun atmosphere through repetitive exposure and use in context.

I agree with you.

That’s right.
